What happened to Government for the public good?

The BC provincial govt is at war with its own citizens. These days, when it comes to environmental protection, protests, blockades and civil disobedience comprise the last remaining communication tools available. Since the BC Govt dumbed-down environmental protection laws several years ago, threats to health, safety & living conditions of citizens across the province have been mounting.

The record is clear: tax-paying citizens don't have a chance. Look at Shawnigan Lake where 5 million tonnes of contaminated soil is to be dumped in a quarry that is located in its watershed, source of drinking water for 7,000 people. Take the Kinder Morgan pipeline project, to twin a pipeline containing bitumen from the tar sands through inhabited areas of Greater Vancouver. Consider the Northern Gateway Pipeline, denounced by First Nations groups, the Union of BC Municipalities, and environmentalists alike. Case in point is the 2014 Mount Polley mine disaster.

Now, residents of the Nicola Valley are being inundated with sewage sludge (the untreatable left-overs of waste water treatment plants, containing fecal coliform, heavy metals, and other noxious substances) from all over BC. Private companies are being contracted by municipalities (ie. Abbotsford) and districts (ie. Regional District of the Central Okanagan) to dispose of their sewer sludge.

Under the revised provincial Organic Matter Recycling Regulation, a private contractor can operate in secrecy, with no requirement to let people nearby know what it proposes to do, give notice, post its plans or consult.

Nor is there a licensing procedure, whereby government issues a permit for a private contractor to apply sludge to agricultural land. All the contractor has to do is to file an 'Application Plan', and 30 days later the trucks of sludge can start arriving. The 'Application Plan' does not have to include any information about people residing close-by; apparently, the effects the noxious operation will have on them is unimportant.

And with staff cutbacks, there is no routine government monitoring of the operation. Somebody has to complain, and then (maybe) an investigator will be sent to visit the site. This means the contractor is free to dispose greater quantities of sludge, and the sludge can have higher concentrations of fecal coliform and heavy metals than the (practically un-vetted) Plan described in the first place.

Imagine your home transformed forever ... Contamination of surface water, contamination of ground water, contamination of drinking water, contamination of the soil, contamination in the air, noise pollution, and the un-relenting stink of human waste, all in a parcel right next to you. 30 days. No notice. No consultation. No teeth in the regulations to protect you. It's time the BC Govt figured out who is paying the taxes, and focused on human health over private gain for sludge disposal.

The Capital Regional District (Victoria) has banned the application of bio-solids within its boundaries and is constructing an incinerator to dispose of its hazardous waste. Why isn't the provincial government building incinerators around the province to deal with bio-solids, and protect the health of citizens?

Surely the safe disposal of sewer sludge is a function of government, not to be privatized so that sludge is dumped on any old community, to the extreme detriment of the victim-residents. The laws permitting contracting out of this public health function should be repealed, and proper, safe disposal mechanisms be set up by government – isn't this what we pay our taxes for?

— Libby Dybikowski, resident of Miller Sunshine Valley Estates

What comes after three? A teacher asked little Johnny if he knows his "1 to 10" well. "Yes! Of course! My pop taught me...even more than 10" "Good. What comes after three?" "Four," answers the boy. "What comes after six?" "Seven." "Very good," says the teacher. "Your dad did a good job. Now...so what comes after...lets say ten?" "A jack!"
