Random truck fire Firefighters detained a Clearwater man at the scene of a vehicle fire on the 1500 block of Coldwater Ave., on Sunday. According to police, the fire appears to have been a random act, and the suspect appeared in court in Kamloops.

Marking 50 years

On February 1st, Harry Lali quietly marked the 50th anniversary of his arrival in Merritt. He was 9 & a half years old, the youngest of 6 children. That was when his father Bhagat S. Lali was able to send for his wife Rattan K. Lali & their family to join him in Merritt. In 1958, Bhagat & 2 of his 3 brothers came from the Punjab to Kamloops, at the request of his brother-in-law who was Tara S. Ghog's brother. The Ghogs founded Aspen Planers, and together with Bhagat S. Lali they became Merritt's first South Asian residents.

Now, 50 years later, the 4th generation of Lalis live here: Harry's nephew Kewal's son Rajin Lali (you might know him from the Kinder Morgan commercial).

Between Bhagat's and his siblings' families, "there were 17 Lali 'kids' in Merritt. There were 11 telephone listings for Lalis in the book," said Harry. Over the years, the Lali brood grew in numbers as the extended family prospered. And of the first generation that was born & raised in Merritt, there are 54, with 48 of them going on to get university degrees. "In 1966, the population was 4,000. There were 2 traffic lights, and the railway still went through. In the 60s, it could be -60°C in the winter & over 40°C in the summer," Harry remembers.

In India, he was in grade 4, fluent in Punjabi & Hindi. In Merritt, he had to start in grade 1 in order to learn English, but was advanced twice as he learned the language quickly. He went on to UVic & UBC with degrees in History and South Asian area studies, as well as some political science studies, working in the mills in the summers.

Harry returned to Merritt and worked at Merritt Outreach Services, as an employment counsellor. 1988 was his first foray into politics as a city alderman. He was elected as an NDP MLA in Oct. 1991, then again in May 1996, and named Minister of Transportation & Hwys in Feb. 1998. He resigned as minister in Feb. 2001, then didn't seek re-election, with the NDP in disarray. He was re-elected in 2005 & again in 2009, but of course not in the government.

Harry was the 2nd Indo-Canadian representative in a provincial govt (Mo Sahota was the first), but first from a rural constituency. And until a couple years ago, he was the longest-serving visible minority MLA, until Jenny Kwan outlasted him.

"The 70s & the 90s were the best decades for Merritt, there was an affluence with the mills & the mine... There were many single, young Punjabi men living & working in Merritt. Many brought back brides from India and raised their families here. Harry's wife Rani was born and raised in Merritt, as were their 3 children.

"In the 90s, it was widely viewed that the population was 1/3 First Nations, 1/3 European descent, and 1/3 Indo-Canadian", he says. At the peak, there were 225 Indo-Canadian families, and the Sikh temple was expanded. Motels & houses were built, the newcomers willing to take the risks to succeed. Now there are approx. 30 families & 30 couples retiring or near retiring. "At the turn of the century (2000), many families retired, cashed out and moved to the Lower Mainland to be with their children, who had left for work & to attend university." And with that, there was a shift. "In 1991 Merritt had one of the highest average incomes in the province. Ten years ago it was the lowest," he says.

In the mid-80s, the opening of the Coquihalla Highway brought a huge promise to double the population. Harry thinks "it's ironic and strange, and a bit of a tragedy that it never happened." He still thinks the potential is there, though, for Merritt to become a distribution & re-distribution hub. "But the community needs to get creative."

"Merritt is a great place to raise a family & retire, but many of those services have disappeared. I think Merritt missed out on the changing demographic for growth experienced in other communities: new immigrants from south & east Asia, Korea, the Middle East."

Higher Education A dog is so smart that his master decides to send him to college. Home for vacation, his master asks him how college is going. "Well," says the dog, "I'm not doing too great in science and math, but I have made a lot of progress in foreign languages." "Really!" says the master. "Say something in a foreign language." The dog says, "Meow!"
