The Library is cool

TNRD Emergency Operations Centre and the Thompson-Nicola Regional Library are advising residents to visit their local library if they need access to a cooler public space during this current stretch of hotter-than-normal weather.

The Merritt Library and the other 11 community libraries in the Thompson-Nicola region are equipped with air conditioning and free Wi-Fi.

While our libraries allow residents to find a reprieve from hot weather, they are also community spaces which spark creativity, engagement, and community connections. The TNRL has been dedicated to lifelong learning for residents for 49 years, celebrating literacy & transforming lives through knowledge & information.

The heat wave is expected to last through Thursday, then return to seasonal daytime temperatures by Friday.

Monday's Hamilton Hill grass fire

Just before 7pm on Monday, a grass fire started on Hamilton Hill adjacent to the highway, human-caused according to BC Wildfire Service.

It grew to 4 hectares before it was deemed under control. Merritt Fire Rescue attended, along with a 'full' response from BCWS. The fuel was primarily grass, and a few trees at the perimeter of the burned area were singed.

Boom time for ranch properties

LandQuest's Rudy Nielsen, a former rancher, at one time the largest individual property owner in BC, continues to sell ranch land and run a real estate analysis company after five decades in the business. The world's wealthy are driving the market for ranches, and as a consequence, he's never seen so much demand for ranch land in B.C. They're motivated by escalating values, and also by the Yellowstone TV show phenomenon, about rich guys and their cattle.

"There are countries where you can't buy that much land, but that's why they are all buying here," says Mr. Nielsen. He bought his first ranch in 1972 and has personally owned 6 more working ranches.

"The prices ranches are going for are nuts – the highest I've seen in 50 years."

A major driver, he says is global water shortages, and major amounts of water are needed to grow hay and alfalfa to feed cattle. He says it takes two tons of hay to feed a cow throughout the winter, which requires considerable land and water.

"The big boys with all that money, I think they see somewhere down the road, 20 or 30 years from now, we are going to have food shortages and we won't have enough water to feed everybody.

And even if the buyer turns out to be a lousy rancher, the land appreciates, so it's a sound long-term investment. A billionaire can pick up a deal in B.C.

Unlike Alberta, Manitoba and Saskatchewan, B.C. doesn't limit what foreigners can purchase, which makes B.C. a draw. Some come looking for water to grow hay and alfalfa. Others are looking to cosplay the ranch lifestyle, even if it's only for a couple months of the year.

He estimates about one-third of buyers are looking for a bolthole, something self-sustaining with water rights, such as creeks, lakes and ponds.

— Excerpt from: Kerry Gold, www.theglobeandmail.com/real-estate/vancouver/article-boom-time-for-ranch-properties/

I'm looking at the periodic table and there is no element of surprise.

If Bill Gates had a penny for every time I had to reboot my computer... Oh wait, he does.

What kind of music is best for a fishing trip? Something catchy.

What did crows do before the crowbar? They drank alone.

I now know how it will end for me... One of my kid's will unplug my life support to charge their phone.

Bucket Case Joe: "I still remember what my grandpa said when he kicked the bucket." Moe: "What did he say?" Joe: "He said, 'How far do you think I can kick this bucket?'"

Night market tonight!
