where Vivian taught for 35 years.

Vivian has left a "legacy of breaking barriers not only as the first Chinese Canadian teacher hired by the Vancouver School 280-1701, merritthospice@shaw.ca Board in 1950, but also as a key figure in ending racial segregation at a local public pool." Born in Merritt in 1924, she faced numerous hurdles to fulfil her dream of becoming a teacher. Vivian's father came to Canada at the age of 16 to work on the railroad.

"My father (Chen Sing) said he was lucky to survive because the cousins he came with all died working on the railway," Jung said in an interview in 2012. "The severe winters and the poor food and poor housing were terrible." Her father wasn't able to return to China after the completion of the railway in 1885, but managed to marry and start a business and family in Merritt.

Although Vivian, her sisters Velma (Tootie), Irene & Mae; and brothers Isaac (Ike), George, Ernie, & Jim were encouraged to get a good education, prejudice was rife and opportunities were limited. She described how a school principal in Merritt told her father that he shouldn't bother sending his daughters to Vancouver for further education as "they would not be accepted into teachers' school and would not get a job."

After moving to Vancouver, Vivian attended Strathcona Elementary School, then King Edward and King George high schools. Encouraged by her sister Velma (Tootie), she obtained her teaching diploma from Vancouver Normal School in 1945. She then met and married Victoria-born Arthur Jung, who fought for Canada during the Second World War alongside his two brothers. But they still faced discrimination.

Vivian wasn't hired for 5 years, then finally in 1950 she started at Tecumseh Elementary School and continued working there as a teacher and coach until 1986, choreographing dance routines for school events, organizing basketball clinics, and coaching softball and volleyball teams that won championships against other schools.

Vivian was involved in a pivotal incident in the summer of 1945 at a Vancouver's Crystal Pool, which had a racist "colour ban" in place that prohibited non-white people from accessing the pool. Pool staff denied her admission to Crystal Pool for a lifesaving course that she needed to qualify as a teacher. That day, Jung's instructor and classmates stood with their friend, and refused to enter the pool without her. Other acts of protest followed, and a boycott, leading to the beginning of the desegregation of public spaces in Vancouver and across British Columbia.

In 2018, lanes were named for influencial citizens in Vancouver's West End, and Vivian is included in that list. Jung Lane is between Harwood St. & Beach Ave. Source: thetyee.ca/Culture/2024/05/27, NV Museum Archives, City of Vancouver Yes, money cannot buy you happiness, but I'd still feel a lot more comfortable crying in a new BMW than on a bike.

> Why was the horse so happy? Because he lived in a stable environment. One day you're the best thing since sliced bread. The next, you're toast.
