Minister of Forests tours Merritt Fire Zone training centre

Wrapping up his Thompson Okanagan tour, Minister of Forests Ravi Parmar met with BC Wildfire Service staff at the Merritt Fire Zone training facility, yesterday.

With the new fire season starting April 1st, it was the 'calm before the storm' at the Fire Base. The Merritt Fire Base will be seeing a few hundred new recruits in the coming weeks for boot camp.

Highest ever number of applications for wildland firefighters

The Province is ramping up wildfire preparedness for 2025 by welcoming back experienced wildland firefighters and training a new wave of recruits, following a record number of applicants.

Since October 2024, the BC Wildfire Service received more than 2,200 applications, the highest recorded number of applications ever received. This includes 578 in January alone, the largest number ever received in a single month.

First Nations training & recruitment

A dedicated training and recruitment model for First Nations communities is expanding this spring, with sessions that build local capacity, strengthen relationships between the local First Nation and fire centre, improve wildfire response, and address needs heard from communities. First Nations bootcamps will begin in April 2025 in several fire centres, along with new-recruit bootcamps at the Merritt training facility. Upon completion, successful candidates will be offered positions on crews around the province.

Lawsuit alleges historic sexual abuse at Merritt Catholic church

A woman who attended Merritt's Catholic church as a child alleges she was sexually abused by a priest more than 50 years ago.

That's according to a recently filed lawsuit which claims he used his position of trust and authority to "prey" on her and sexually assault her at Sacred Heart Church.

The plaintiff, who iNFOnews.ca is not naming, is now taking The Roman Catholic Diocese of Kamloops to civil court alleging the overseeing organization failed to protect her, according to a notice of civil claim.

She said the priest was responsible for teaching children and providing guidance in a "parent-like" role, both through religious and educational mentoring. Instead, he used his position to abuse her and keep her from telling anyone about it, according to court documents.

The alleged abuse took place around the years 1971 to 1973, but the ages of the priest, who wasn't fully identified in the claim, and the alleged victim are not clear in the lawsuit. She is described as being a "young child" during those years.

It's not clear whether the priest is still alive and he is not named as a defendant.

In the years that followed, the alleged victim said she suffered PTSD, depression, sexual dysfunction and mistrust of authority figures and men. She continues to go through counselling and medical treatment, according to her claim.

According to her lawsuit, the Kamloops Diocese failed to properly supervise the priest and failed to document the abuse or discipline him. Whether the church was aware of abuse isn't known, but she claimed the church ought to have known it was happening.

Spring snowfall warning

Environment Canada is warning about an early spring snowfall on the Coquihalla, Hope to Merritt, with total amounts of 20-30cm expected. It was to start last night through this evening.

A Pacific frontal system is impacting southern BC through toay. Light to moderate snow was begin last night, then intensify to a period of heavy snow through this afternoon, and ease by early evening.

Community

Red Cross support for flood victims

The Canadian Red Cross is launching a new one-time financial assistance program for impacted households, including homeowners, tenants, and community-owned homes. Households that registered with the Red Cross during 2021 will be contacted by email or phone. They will be invited to complete a questionnaire to access financial assistance, which aims to help with recovery-related needs and assess ongoing impacts. The deadline to submit the questionnaire is March 21. FMI Canadian Red Cross 1-800-863-6582, Mon-Fri 8:30am-4:30 pm, www.redcross.ca/2021BCFloods.
